

Matthew Bennett is a Cardiac Electrophysiologist who works in Vancouver. He completed his undergraduate degree in Mathematics prior to completing his medical school training, internal medicine and cardiology residencies at the University of British Columbia. He then went on to do an arrhythmia fellowship in London, Ontario. His clinical interests include complex device implantation and ablation. His research interest relates to optimal cardiac implantable electronic device function and knowledge translation as it pertains to ICDs.